(L-R) Angelina, J-Law and Naomi can thank good genes and Dr David Colbert (below) for their gorgeous skin

Angelina's £15k 'raindrop' facial doctor reveals all!

he could not talk specifically about what he's done for Angelina, he was happy to explain the treatment to us: 'People call it a facial but it's actually a non-invasive laser treatment. First we prep skin with microdermabrasion, so the laser penetrates better. Then we use a laser, which feels like warm raindrops on the skin. After that we do a lavender acid exfoliation, then apply gentle wave lights.'

The best part for an A-lister? Unlike other skin treatments, such as acid peels, there is no downtime, meaning you can walk straight out of his office looking amazing. 'The treatment takes about 35 minutes for the face or one hour for the whole body – we usually treat the arms and legs, the bits that will be on show,' he said. 'Most of our stars will have it before any big event – the Emmys or Oscars. People who are regularly in the media will come in monthly or every other month.'

Dr Colbert, who runs a surgery in New York, also revealed that stars like Angelina are surprisingly low-maintenance. 'They're blessed with beautiful skin and they are smart enough to know how to look after it,' he said. Lucky them!

David first met Angelina when she was working on the film Salt in 2009. 'I've worked with her on several movies as a consultant where there has been prosthetic make-up,' he said. 'For Salt we developed a skin cream that was really gentle, with shea nut butter. It's called Heal and Soothe, £120, and helps keep skin looking calm and dewy.'

When Colbert isn't around to treat his clients (who include Victoria's Secret models), they can use a three-product programme at home. 'We developed a home microdermabrasion made with milk acid, then you follow up with the stimulate serum and a facial oil,' he said. 'Those are very popular with Michelle Williams – and Rosie Huntington-Whiteley likes to tweet about it. Adrianna Lima and Sienna Miller are also big fans.' With a fanbase like that, we're sold!

If you've ever wondered how Angelina Jolie keeps her skin so youthful and radiant at 39, we finally have the answer. Following reports last week that the actress spends a whopping £15,000 a year maintaining her complexion with monthly 'Triad facials', we spoke to the doctor behind the procedure.

Dr David Colbert is the A-list's go-to man before a red-carpet appearance and has also worked with Jennifer Lawrence, Sienna Miller and Naomi Watts. Although
